comparing early phases of urban development in four regions the indus valley mesopotamia china and mesoamerica this essay offers a global perspective on the origins of civic life while we may never be able to reconstruct the unwritten constitutions of these earliest cities or the reforms undergone in their first centuries we can hardly doubt that these existed consideration of archaeological and written evidence from across the four areas suggests in every case that significant checks and balances were placed on the centralisation of power and wealth during the early development of urban societies increasingly the burden of proof lies with theorists who argue for causal or evolutionary connections between the origins of cities and the rise of stratified states the myth of generations of disengaged youth has been shattered by increases in youth turnout in the 2004 2006 and 2008 primaries young americans are responsive to effective outreach efforts and this collection addresses how to best provide opportunities for enhancing civic learning and forming lasting civic identities the thirteen original essays are based on research in schools and in settings beyond the schoolyard where civic life is experienced one focus is on programs for those schools in poor communities that tend to overlook civic education another chapter reports on how two city governments hampton virginia and san francisco have invited youth to participate on boards and in agencies a cluster of chapters focuses on the civic education programs in canada and western europe where as in the united states immigration and income inequality raise challenges to civic life since the 1950s and the advance of urban renewal local governments and urban policy have focused heavily on the central business district however such development has all but ignored the inner city neighborhoods that continue to struggle in the shadows of high rise america this analysis of urban neighborhoods in the united states from 1960 to 1995 presents fifteen essays by scholars of urban planning and development together they show how urban neighborhoods can and must be preserved as economic cultural and political centers
